For the Autodesk Architectural Modeling.Exploring Patient and Provider Factors Associated with Medication Adherence, Persistence, and Switching for State Medicaid Patients With Chronic and Self-Limited Asthma. Medication adherence and persistence are often poor, even among patients with chronic and severe conditions. We explored the relationship between adherence and persistence among Medicaid patients with asthma treated by primary care physicians. We conducted a retrospective cohort study of Medicaid patients with asthma on an employer plan and >365 days of follow-up during 2006-2013 using administrative claims data. We determined the number of days covered (NDC), proportion of days covered (PDC), and persistence. We defined adherence as NDC >80%. We assessed demographic, clinical, and medication factors associated with adherence and persistence. We used multivariable logistic regression to determine factors associated with adherence, persistence, and medication switching. We used multivariable linear regression to determine factors associated with PDC. All comparisons were stratified by self-limited vs chronic asthma. There were 2,150 patients with asthma who met study criteria; 1,237 (58%) were chronic and 913 (42%) were self-limited. Adjusted odds ratios (AOR) [95% CI] for adherence were 0.94 (0.84, 1.06) and 1.47 (1.23, 1.77) for chronic and self-limited asthma, respectively. For persistence, AOR [95% CI] for chronic and self-limited asthma were 0.96 (0.92, 1.01) and 0.91 (0.84, 0.99), respectively. Adherence was associated with being 65 years or older, female, and having an outpatient visit in 2011. Persistence was associated with being 65 years or older, being treated by a primary care physician, and having 1 or more outpatient visit in

(c) The cash payout factor for the Gator's standard policy is... (a) You may assume that the total basic amount of the Gator's standard policy will not exceed $400,000, subject to the increase in the premium over time that is permitted by section 10.8. (b) You may calculate the adjusted amount payable to the participant's account as of August 12, 2001, by the following procedure: (i) Determine the participant's account balance at the date of separation as of 11:59 p.m. Pacific Standard Time on August 12, 2001, which will be determined by deducting $700,000 from the account balance of $717,504. (ii) Deduct from the account balance, any remaining balance from the account on September 30, 2000, after the initial distribution of $225,000 of the plan's surplus assets. The amount will be the amount that you calculate the participant's account would have reached if the Gator had been in existence on September 30, 2000, with the first distribution of surplus plan assets at the end of the year. (iii) Deduct from the resulting balance the participant's cost-of-living adjustment for 2001, not to exceed 25%, and his salary that is expected to be earned in the year before he becomes eligible for retirement. Expected earnings are determined by the retirement benefit, and salary data, as explained in the Gator's Summary Plan Description. [15] The Insurers are correct that the text of the
